Stone Cantilevered Staircases

Stone Cantilevered Staircases were first introduced into England from Venice in the early 17th Century by Indigo Jones and have been used in many of the great country and town houses of Europe since that time.

The elegance of a cantilevered stone stair cannot be equalled with any other material, the structure allows the opportunity to maximise the light and space in a stairwell whilst providing stunning architectural detail.

By the careful arrangement and precise cutting of the joints between the individual treads it is possible to produce the steps triangularly on section saving up to 50% of the weight of each tread, making the structure more cost effective and at the same time allowing the beauty a perfectly smooth soffit

CWO have a wealth of experience with cantilevered staircase's having produced and installed many over the years, each staircase is unique, starting in our drawing office where the workshop drawings are developed from architects drawings or designed from scratch to the clients individual needs.

Each step is then produced in our workshops using some of the most advanced machinery in the industry, guaranteeing the accuracy, they are then hand finished by our award winning masons and despatched to site for fixing.
